

I believe that it is in the best interest of consumers and of industry producers to allow copy protection of material to a point. Home users should still have a fair use recording ability. It is, however, beneficial to the industry to have digital rights management built into the broadcast, denying gross retransfer of the broadcast. DRM limits widespread piracy, but still allows end users the benefits of delayed broadcast viewing.